COOKING & SERVING TAGINE

AT-Like casserole, the word Tagine (or Tagine) is used to refer to both the cooking vessel and the dish itself. A tagine (the vessel) is a heavy ceramic plate made from glazed earthenware covered with a conical lid with the same material.

In Morocco, tagines come in different shapes and colors from the urbanite Slaoui tagine to the smoothly glazed Beldi (folk) and the beautifully decorated.

ERK SOUS

Rooting out a sweet tradition Egypt and the Levant (Jordan, Lebanon, Palestine and Syria) have been drinking erk sous, a liquorice juice, from street vendors for generations. This cultural trade-mark is being affected by the onslaught of urbanization and a demand for diversification.
